

Characterizing distribution channels to provide analysis for package validations.

Russell Darley / Randall Troutman, CPP
Global Packaging Development
Smith & Nephew, Memphis, TN

Abstract

This paper will demonstrate how Smith & Nephew characterizes its shipping environment to ensure product and package combinations are subjected to an adequate distribution simulation during the development and validation process. In addition, the data collection process allows Smith & Nephew to create temperature maps of our distribution channels for consideration when shipping medical products that require critical temperature storage ranges.